I think I left my phone in the back seat. Would you mind checking for me?

I haven't seen it around anywhere, but if it turns up, we'll call you.

He was hurt. Bad.

There wasn't a lot of time. or there might not be, anyway.

The trauma, handled. The tone of the machine dictated by others.

A difficult sort of complex, one now considered the norm by others.

The quest for a perfect trace, rather than an accurate one, bothered her.

But who was she. Really.

She got back on the train and headed home.

A test all along.

She didn't want to pass.

An alternate ending.

Disbelief.

Power down.
